Accordingly, Jennifer went on to obtain her Master of Library & Information Science, also from Southern Mississippi. Before moving to Cleveland in January 2015 to be the director at BCLS, Jennifer lived in Jackson and worked at the Mississippi Library Commission, She was named a Library Journal Mover & Shaker in 2010 and is actively involved in the Mississippi Library Association since 2004, currently serving as Treasurer.

"Cleveland and Bolivar County have been wonderful for me and I love living here," Jennifer states. "The people are warm and wily and welcoming. Mississippians in general are great storytellers, but it's taken to a new level in the Delta. Sometimes I think a story I'm hearing can't possibly be true—but it is! The sky is so big here and sunsets last forever. I love it and I feel lucky to be here and to work with such a wonderful team at the Bolivar County Library System." She lives with two cats (Spooky and Bug) and her favorite books are The Fitz & Fool series by Robin Hobb.

Like-Farming — How to Avoid This Scam

You've seen the Facebook posts: "Ten cute puppies that will melt your heart" or "Let Suzy know she is still beautiful, even after surgery." How about the ones that "challenge" you to like: "I bet no one will have the guts to like this!" These are usually scams called like-farming.

Some scammers will ask you to "register" to win something like an iPad or fabulous trip, but really they are stealing your personal information. Some are just waiting until they get enough likes and shares, then change the post and add something malicious—like a link with malware or promoting "spammy" products. They sometimes will resell such a page on the black market, who then use it to spam followers or harvest info available on Facebook.

How do you avoid this scam? The Better Business Bureau recommends:

- —Use your good judgement. If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. Be wary of posts from someone you don't know.
- -Don't click "like" on every post in your feed.

- —Be cautious with sharing your personal information. Never give out personal info such as your full name, telephone number, address, etc. to someone you don't know.
- —Update your web browser. If kept updated, if you accidentally click on a scammer's post, your browser is more likely to warn you about suspicious sites.

For more info, go to BBB.org/ scamtips. If you've been the victim of such a scam, report it at BBB.org/scamtracker.

Looking for a Good Book?

Jennifer: Wilde in Love: the Wildes of Lindlow Castle by Eloisa James. Lord Alaric Wilde is rather the notorious adventurer who meets the very private, lady-like Miss Willa Ffynche—and sparks ensue. A humorous romance set in the Georgian Period. An easy, enjoyable summer read. (ILL—Fiction)

Tamara: Sing, Unburied, Sing by Jesmyn Ward. Story of three generations of an African-American family struggling to cope with poverty, illness, racism, and a sense of hopelessness. A work of fiction, but accurate in historical details. Some may find it depressing in its realism, but highly recommended. (Print & eBook—Fiction)

Tamara: Perennials by Julie Cantrell. When Lovey, a 45-yearold, deeply unhappy and disillusioned woman living in Arizona is called home to Oxford, MS, for her parents 50th wedding anniversary, she must face her fears, disappointments, and, worse of all, her hateful sister Bitsy. Lovey begins the process of healing as she helps her father build a memory garden for her mother. The author's use of garden and flower symbolism throughout the book heightens the underlying themes. I loved this novel!! (Print—Fiction)

Some Bolivar County History...

"Incidents of the War in Bolivar County, As Experienced by a Ten-Year-Old Boy, and as Given by Him By Walter Sillers"—Continued

Our last newsletter ended with our author fleeing with others from the Lenoir Place, which was under attack.

"After this experience, we went to the "tall timbers." In fact, all the families along the river front abandoned their homes and refugeed on the abandoned plantations on Bogue Phalia, where they remained until 1864, when they returned home with a few faithful slaves who continued true to the end. Only about twenty of my father's slaves stayed with us: all the others fled to "freedom."

It was too dangerous for the families of the soldiers in this vicinity to live in their homes on the river, and all "refugeed" to Bogue Phalia, a beautiful stream in the interior. Our family went to the abandoned plantation of General Gardner on this stream, clear, deep, and full of fish, in the midst of giant forests. Solitude surrounded us; great bear tracks showed on trail and road. The howls of the timber wolves were heard at night. Deer abounded, wild turkeys and ducks were plentiful, the fishing fine, and with the excitement of war, the news of which came to us from straggling soldiers, sometimes from Federal deserters, our banishment was not attended with the usual homesickness. We had our slaves with us and quite a large family of relatives. It was a period of excitement and adventure for a small boy, and lasted two years. All of the cotton in the Delta had been burned to prevent its capture by the Federals. Only a little of it was saved by hiding it in the woods. When this was used up we had to plan to raise more, and in 1864 we went back home.

Powder was worth $20 a pound. We got our powder from the unexploded shells everywhere around us, and our shot were made from pellets of lead, rolled round by using a short plank or board. We did not starve or despair, but fared better than might have been expected, hid out in the woods from the enemy.

One of my "war experiences" stands out plainly in my memory. Very reluctantly, I was reciting my grammar one day, when our "refugee" home was suddenly surrounded by Colonel Curry's Marines, who occasionally raided the country from the White River base. Then befell the greatest calamity that could befall a boy. They took my gun and my hunting horse, and though my mother pleaded to the last, they took every gun or weapon of any kind, leaving women and children without any means of protection from man or beast. A Federal captain, a Kentuckian, would have left my gun with me, but Colonel Curry said, "No, nothing comes out of that wagon." My hunting, after that, was done with sticks and brick bats, no stones or pebbles being in this Delta country. I became quite an expert at this new trade. I killed eight birds one day with brick bats, and a blue wing teal with a heavy stick. Then to my everlasting joy and delight, Lieutenant Robinson gave me a single barrel shotgun that he had taken in a raid near Vicksburg when my father's old company had captured an island, and this gun was my share of the booty. We never wanted for game after this, though my ammunition was scarce, three loads being my portion for a hunt."

Walter Sillers' exciting story will be continued in the next newsletter.
